

This issue and numbers 4 and 5 of the Marshall Studies Bulletin are freely accessible on web-site <http://www.cce.unifi.it/rivista/welcome.htm>. The site, opened in 1995, can also be accessed from other sites of interest to historians of economic thought. Since this makes the Marshall Studies Bulletin easily available worldwide, the Board has decided to continue issuing the journal in the electronic version alone.

Therefore, 1996 is the last hard-copy yearly version of the Bulletin. The journal will remain registered according to Italian law. Articles and reviews can be submitted as usual, and authorship of their publication in the Bulletin will be recognized according to international standards.

The Board invites proposals, comments and queries, and hopes that the Bulletin will continue to receive the same attention from the scientific community that it has received in the past.

It will also hopefully serve as a venue for discussion and as a means for exchanging information on current research, seminars, conferences, and planned research projects.
